Toulouse

In its bohemian heyday of the 19th century, became the home of Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec for the whole of his adult life.

A Club in Montmartre: An Encounter with Henri De Toulouse

His design, with its innovative border that incorporates the neck of the double bass, plays with concepts of space and perspective, inspired by the flattened compositions of Japanese prints. At one time they were together at the Cormon atelier, which was a centre of Post Impressionism, more precisely Cloisonnism, a technique involving highly abstract zones of colour often contained in dark outlines and clearly defined. Henri moved to Paris with his mother when he was eight years old.
