More than merely a commonplace phenomenon, each successive generation offers a dynamic structure that connects self to other, family to nation-state, and collective experience to historical time. This study examines the role that generations play in four contemporary novels and one novella: Ian McEwan's Atonement, Salman Rushdie's Midnight's Children, Jhumpa Lahiri's Hema and Kaushik, Don DeLillo's Underworld, and Cormac

McCarthy's The Road.
