the Jane Goodall Institute Homepage

Currently all of the original Jane Goodall archives reside there and have been digitised and analysed and placed in an online database. She also saw chimps remove leaves from twigs in order to make a tool.

Her association with Leakey led eventually to her establishment in June 1960 of a camp in the Gombe Stream Game Reserve now a national park so that she could observe the behaviour of chimpanzees in the region. Mining and logging had begun to denude the habitat needed by her chimpanzees; desperately poor people were using slash and burn agriculture to survive. Legacy Jane won many awards for her environmental work including the J.
