The Harleian Miscellany

The words by him delivered at his death; and his stout, but Christian-like manner of dying. None, I presume, will deny the perfection of a language to consist in facility, copiousness, sweet- ness, and significance; in all which, if I can make good that our language is equal, if not superior to the rest, I hope he must be very far transported with passion, and deeply factious, that will not assent unto me. A discourse relating a strange and monstrous serpent or dragon lately discovered, and yet living, to the great annoyance and divers slaughters both of men and cattell, by his strong and violent poyon; in Sussex, two miles from Horsam, in a wood called St.
