Another bird of the high open areas is the burrowing owl, so called because it makes its nest in a hole in the ground, often adapting to its use an abandoned prairie dog burrow, which has given rise to the story that it inhabits these burrows along with the prairie dog and rattlesnake, a story long since disproved. On the coastal prairie there lives one of the most attractive game birds of all Texas, Attwater's greater prairie-chicken. Bird diversity, she adds, can also mean a healthy environment.
