Pharsalia

Some scholars have tried to read these lines ironically, but most see it as a traditional dedication written at a time before the supposed true depravity of Lucan's patron was revealed. Caesar returns to Rome and plunders the city, while Pompey reviews potential foreign allies. Book 5: The Senate in exile confirms Pompey the true leader of Rome.

The reviews address an international readership from all fields in classical studies. Jahrhundert verfiel jedoch Lukans Ruhm, da seine Sprache oft als bloße gewertet und für undichterisch gehalten wurde. Others have suggested that the lines were written to replace the encomium to Nero after the poet had cooled to the emperor.
