Understanding the Copula

I am not sure whether I explained the ná fully. Is not mise the subject here, and is not an rí the information given? Then we have, tá fuath agam d ò, tá grá agam duit, tá cion agam air, tá fearg agam chuige, or tá fearg orm chuige, according as my anger is a deliberate act, or only a feeling of anger.

Peter O'Leary (författare)

Neithe beaga iseadh iad san, ach is neithe beaga iad a thagan isteach go mion minic sa chaint. Luasann an tAthair Peadar mo šaoġġ!.

Do you disagree with the global warming fallacy? Another error in some textbooks is to claim there is a difference between the logical subject and predicate and the grammatical subject and predicate, but Ó Nualláin shows too that this is merely the importation of an anglicising influence on Irish, where the way things are said in English is held to exercise a dominant influence on the explanation of Irish grammar. Now, from the very essence of is in the sentence Is mise an rí, the information is in the word mise. Examples include is mise Gearóid Ó Nualláin.

Tosach an uilc is é is usa do chosc: here the predicate is tosach an uilc and the subpredicate é prevents the copula from standing next to the subject an chuid den olc is usa do chosc. For example, Shán Ó Cuív was not a native speaker, but he had a good grasp of a real dialect, that of West Muskerry a dialect of which his parents were native speakers , and strong family connections in Cork, allowing him to raise his children with good Irish, not butchered Irish.

Thall ná abhus ní raibh aon tuairisg orm. It is the old story. Tá súil agam nách fada go mbeidh sé curtha dhi aici le cúnamh Dé.
