Foundations of Linguistics: Course Homepage

Fundamental agreements and disagreements in linguistics, Linguistics is a relatively unified field of study, compared to many others. The traditional position of linguistics has been that grammars should be neutral to production and perception. More recently, the uniformity of these variable patterns has been found to be also based on a structural homogeneity.

Linguistics does not have a privileged claim upon language as an object of study; there are many other disciplines that examine it psychology, speech pathology, rhetoric, literary studies, semiotics, and so on.

The Foundations of Arabic Linguistics

Much of the research in the materialist paradigm is devoted to the study of linguistic change, and in particular linguistic change in process. Explanation is the materialist approach is a search for substantive correlates of linguistic behavior in its physical and social substrata.
