Socially and politically, the gifts of his wife, Lady Emily Hobart, daughter of a former Irish viceroy, whom he had married in 1794, assisted him to make his house a meeting-place of the party; and his influence in parliament grew notwithstanding his defects of style, spoken and written.

The Castlereagh

Castlereagh found this loss of popularity very painful. The undertaking was one of unusual difficulty, but his lordship was not one to be lightly turned from the task he had undertaken, and the fact that in the month of July, 1831, the first cargo of coals was shipped at this port, goes to prove with how much energy and skill the work had been carried out. The disloyal in Ireland, both Jacobins and priest-led, the Protestant zealots and others who feared the consequence of the Union, coalesced against him in Dublin.

Lord Castlereagh

Castlereagh loyally supported the government in parliament, after Lord Wellesley's appointment to the Foreign Office.

Robert Stewart, viscount Castlereagh

Perhaps in deference to his widow, the inquest found that Castlereagh had taken his own life whilst insane. Moreover, he was damaged by his icy reserve attributed to shyness, for with friends and colleagues he had tact and charm, his disdain for criticism, and his stilted language. On his death, on the 6th November, 1884, he was succeeded by his eldest son, Charles Stewart Vane-Tempest-Stewart, the sixth marquess, who was born on the 16th July, 1852.

Lord Castlereagh

He spoke against abolition of the Irish lord lieutenancy, 11 May. Han var sjælen i den europæiske koalition mod Napoleon, og hans udholdenhed havde væsentlig del i dennes fald; fra januar 1814 fulgte han med de forbundne Hære i Frankrig og tog del i kongressen i og i fredsslutningen i

Paris. The 2nd Marquess, better known as he went by the of Viscount Castlereagh from 1796 to 1821 , was a noted statesman and diplomat.

Robert Stewart, Viscount Castlereagh

Robert Stewart, 2nd Marquess of Londonderry, KG, GCH, PC, PC Ire , Viscount Castlereagh Dublin, Ireland, 18th June 1769 — North Cray, Kent, England, 12th August 1822 Robert Stewart, Viscount Castlereagh, 2nd Marquess of Londonderry by , 1809-10 There are some names that echo through the ages, men and women who will always be remembered for their philanthropy, heroics, or perhaps their infamy. Canning had thrown away his chance by his unwise refusal of the Foreign Office. He was helped in his task by his calm, quiet, passionless and unruffled temperament.

Napoleonic Satires

Wellington who went to attend the Congress of Verona acted on the same principles as were laid down by Castlereagh.
