This says 6 hours, which is about the length of a show sometimes a lot longer than that. Following the examples of Yves Klein and Piero Manzoni whose embracing of the monochrome, rejection of representation and incorporation of real elements into their painting served as an important stimuli, Kounellis sought to integrate real objects and real life into his own work. For his exhibition at the , Kounellis uses materials found in the local Athenian markets and junkyards.

For, as has often been pointed out, the apparent arbitrariness with which the arrows, direction lines and sequence of letters and numbers are arranged in these works, actually echoes closely the same mysterious logic and strange sense of odyssey to be found on the stencilled stamp marks that shipping crates acquire as they pass from harbour to harbour and ship to shore.
