Her use of a stationary tool usually employed for physical mobility to enhance her own social mobility is an example of the very basic capacity we all have to use the resources available to us in innovative ways. It is also important to consider how change is achieved in systems as complex as cities. The next largest group, about one fourth of the total, are the aged. It requires a high degree of social organization and social responsibility, as well as a total reorganization of the housing process.

Urban Housing

The 1970s also saw other urban renewal programs including urban homesteading. The community of apartment owners of the building can choose one of three ways of management of the property. Taking real property off tax roles made the towns angry.

Housing Finance Policy Center

The sociological literature on social and health service provision abounds with evidence that the individual person in need of services is, in essence, at the mercy of the service providers. Drawing on much of Bruner's theoretical analysis, the model of perceptual readiness denotes a process of organizing and categorizing stimuli according to an existing set of percepts.
