The House of Assembly was divided between the English-speaking Tory Party, and the French-speaking Canadian Party, the House majority.

Separate School

The parliament of the United Kingdom duly passed the British North America Act, 1867 now referred to as the Constitution Act, 1867 , which ratified that confederation. All staff for the university - excepting medical professors - had to be clergy of the Church of England and they must be English, not Americans. Separate schools were introduced into Ontario between 1841 and 1867 when Upper Canada was joined with Lower Canada to form the United Province of Canada.

The Schulich School of Law is the largest law school in Atlantic Canada. In recent years, approximately five very exceptional applicants a year have been admitted without completing a four-year undergraduate degree.

Why Canada divides children into separate schools

By the time the 1980s rolled around, school construction slowed as the construction of the previous decades left its mark. Following , the various school boards for each borough were united as the Toronto District School Board.
