Standards Of Practice

Tobogganing can be one of the most thrilling of all winter sports. Initial layout depends on the character of lake frontage, fluctuation of the water level, overall size of the area, topography, protection from prevailing winds, and the type of soil, not only in the parking or turnaround area, but also at the lake bottom directly adjacent to the proposed launching site.

10. Training, promotions and advancement

It is also commonly thought that the best snow conditions are usually found at high altitudes, preferably above 2,000 feet. You can probably remember playing all kinds of games outdoors when you were younger.

Outdoor education

Planning Board, September 1960, p. The turnaround area should be located as close to the ramp as possible so that all back-up operations will be confined to the launch area itself. This recreation study was completed in April of 1954 by the NRA.

There may also be a fieldhouse, running tract, and space for field events; children's playground; outdoor swimming pool; and center for day camping.

10. Training, promotions and advancement

All that is needed is a trough dug one foot below the ground level and approximately 30 inches wide. Natural slopes are sometimes used, but because of the difficulty of steering and controlling the sled, specially constructed slides are more desirable. Provide any help with the process, such as mock interviews or background reading materials, on an equal basis to all candidates, subject to any accommodation requirements and any special program that may be in place.
