To support their good work, tredition donates a portion of the proceeds from each sold copy. I always thought it was called The man in Gray which explained why I could not trace it until now. Alvin Landon and Chester Haynes were at the home of Mike Murphy when Alvin was called back to his fathers house, Chester went with him, the caller was Stockham Calvert a Pinkerton detective, Alvin was told of robberies in the southern part of Maine and he asked for their assistance, Alvin asked what help they could give, Stockham said he had a fast boat and the robbers had a boat very much like Alvin's called the Water Witch, Stockham wanted to use their boat to scout for the other, the boys agreed but only if they and Mike could go, it was agreed, for some reason the boys did not trust Stockham but met him the following morning at the boat, they sailed to the southern end of Barter Island to see if they could see the Water Witch. With no sign of the boat they headed for Wiscasset, on their way the Water Witch actually passed them in the other direction, on turning they were challenged to a race but Alvin was advised not to beat them, they lost sight of the other boat, they pulled up and went to a farmhouse for food, Mike went ahead but the farmer set his dog on him, Stockham stepped ashore and knocked out the man with one blow, they carried on to Wiscasset and moored going to a hotel for dinner, Stockham knew a man at the hotel known as Hagan but did not tell the boys, at this point returning to the boat Stockham left, there were problems with the boat and they moored to fix her while Mike went into the village of Bearstown, Heading to the village Alvin and Chester met Mike who had arranged to stay with the Post lady and her daughter for the night, that night someone knocked at their bedroom door, it was the daughter Nora she had heard voices downstairs Through their window they could see a lookout outside by a tree, Mike slipped out to confront the thieves, now you will have to read on to find out what happens, does Mike catch the thieves, what part is their in the story for Alvin and Chester, can Stockham really be trusted or is he with the thieves, I was bored with this book, lacked action I lost interest, I wouldn't bother with this one I first read my father's copy of The Cruise of the Deerfoot sixty years ago and have been looking for the sequel ever since.

The Launch Boys' Adventures in Northern Waters by Edward Sylvester Ellis

Self-possessed and vaguely smiling, he spoke in an easy, pleasant voice. I have told you how the boys hurried thither, wondering who he could be, and how they were astonished to find him the 'man in gray', who had become strangely mixed up in their affairs during the preceding few days.
