President Franklin D. Roosevelt dies at age 63, April 12, 1945

Part of the problem was her loyalty to the Roosevelts: All her pieces about them lacked critical distance. Laughing, he asked two young men in the crowd of onlookers to help get him back on his feet. The press was discouraged from focusing on vulnerable moments, and for the most part, he was photographed either sitting down or speaking at a carefully fastened podium.

His emotional life was complicated and carefully protected. FDR may genuinely have believed he was still the best man to win the war—and who can gainsay him that? During the war, his daughter Anna arranged for visits with Lucy when Eleanor was out of town.

Eleanor Roosevelt's 'mistress' died heartbroken and alone

After passing the New York bar exam, he went to work as a clerk for the distinguished firm of Carter, Ledyard, and Milburn, but he displayed the same attitude of indifference toward the law as he had toward his education. Try and see if you can speak to Susie -- she's a wealth of information.
