However, in this country as in England, he had to find some occupation that would support him while he kept everlastingly at his writing, and he found it in scene-painting at the Astor Theatre in New York. The worst of the trip was on the way down, for he looked up at the patch of sky far above him and received a cloud of soot in his eyes, that stung him as if it had been pepper. Therefore, in the endeavor to wean him from such proclivities, Farnol, Senior, sent his son.
