Vol. 28, No. 4, Summer 1989 of RQ on JSTOR

This course will include an introduction and application of critical thinking skills, as well as a study of religious and philosophical worldviews. Student learning outcomes are also clearly stated for the academic programs that are offered at the college. This course is a Single Subject Program course and is not applicable to a masters degree.

Fall Term Courses and Descriptions

Lesson planning, teaching strategies, and course assignments are aligned with the expectations of state and national arts standards.

Course Directory Catalog 2020

As a survey of American literature, the course will emphasize ways the literature reflects and informs American experience, but will also provide an opportunity for the student to experience and reflect on essential functions of works of literature in general, as lenses on the existential situation and psychology of individual human beings and as insightful reflections of social realities.
