Journal of William Maclay, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, 1789

Rule} The Imperial Parliament now admits and acts upon the admission, that any one of the Dominions has acquired a moral right to as much independence, at any rate in regard to matters occurring within the territory of such Dominion, as can from the nature of things be conceded to any country which still forms part of the British Empire. ? These powers are practically unlimited save that Federal taxation must not discriminate between States, and money must be appropriated for the purposes of the Commonwealth. It has, therefore, been found impossible to avoid a certain amount of repetition of basal facts and fundamental principles.
