Heinrich Friedrich Karl vom und zum Stein

After the in 1813, Stein became head of the council for the administration of the reconquered German countries. In Berlin, his admiration for , together with his distaste for the pettiness of the legal procedure at Wetzlar, impelled him to take service under the monarch. Shortly afterwards, the reformer had to flee from Prussia.

Heinrich Friedrich Karl vom und zum Stein

During the varying phases of the campaign of 1813 Stein continued to urge the need of war against Napoleon. He retired after the and disliked the postponement of the representative system of government that Frederick William had promised to Prussia in May 1815.

Polizeirecht

At the crisis of that struggle, Stein may have been one of the influences that kept the tsar determined never to treat with Napoleon. There, he studied and found time to pursue his studies in English history and politics. The influence of English ideas, so potent a factor in the lives of , , and many others in the 18th century, was therefore potently operative in the early career of Stein.
