Practical Pan

There was indeed a feeling of antipathy towards Europe, a belief almost that their existence was hostile to our welfare, and that we were by no means as interested in their welfare as they were in ours. This gives then these influences with the afflictions afar of Saturn and Mars. .

PAN

A polarized conceptualization like this left no room for any Hegelian mediation. The old traditions taught that no European alliance could subserve the true interests of the United States; that the Atlantic isolated us from Europe, freed us from its tangle of political alliances, and left us without mutual interests with any European state beyond those which could be advanced by diplomacy.
