Robert Frost: Poems "Choose Something Like a Star" (1943) Summary and Analysis

Initially composed in 1936, this poem is technically a sonnet written in iambic pentameter and free verse.

Robert Frost: Poems Study Guide

This poem is a patriotic poem that recalls the history of English colonial establishment over the Native Americans. Then he takes a subtle swerve in the meaning when compares fire with human passion and human desire that can get too hot and even go onto becoming destructive.

The Poems of Robert Frost: An Explication by Mordecai Marcus

He had one front foot on the wall and the other curved inwards at his breast. Frost was not a happy man; he suffered from serious bouts of depression and anxiety throughout his life and was never convinced that his poetry was truly worthwhile as evidenced by his obsessive desire to receive a Nobel Prize.

The Poems of Robert Frost: An Explication by Mordecai Marcus

He explains that a few words from the star would be enough to help humanity strive for greater heights and, at the very least, be comforted. Every day we have to make decisions, after all, life is about choices and their consequences, and we are only these fragments of our options soldered together.

The Runaway : by Robert Frost

He immediately blows out his candle in terror and tiptoes to the door, silently praying that no one will come in. To convey this theme, the poet has chosen a birch tree because the tree is rooted to the earth well and as a sapling, it has a tendency of bending and retreating back.

The Runaway : by Robert Frost

His attitude towards them is realist, as in 'The Runaway'. Instead, he also chooses to emphasize the harsh conflicts of the natural world: the clash between urban and rural lifestyles, the unfettered emotions and struggles inherent in rural life, even the sense of loss and simultaneous growth that accompanies the changing of the seasons.
