How Can I Monitor Groups?

Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 67, 446—461. Psychological shock results from the fact that body secrecy is suddenly lost upon entry into the latipso.

Understanding and Adapting to Individual Temperaments

In order to progress, the group needs to develop new ideas and approaches, and this requires that the members discuss their different opinions about the decisions that the group needs to make. These people also serve as the points of contact between times of official group meetings.

Group Decision Making

Psychiatric Annals, 83, 65—75. In one interesting observational study of the group development process in real groups, Gersick 1988, 1989 observed a number of teams as they worked on different projects. It is hard to understand how they have managed to exist so long under the burdens which they have imposed upon themselves.

How Can I Monitor Groups?

Glencoe, IL: The Free Press. People occupying these roles are interested in following directions, proper procedure, and going through appropriate channels when making decisions or initiating policy. To monitor how effectively group members are working together on a project, require group members or a group leader to submit in writing or present orally on a regular schedule, such as every week or every two weeks.
