The disentanglement of interest politics: Business associability, the parties and policy in Italy and Greece

The second is for clarification of EU competition law, so that non-standard and self-employed workers are not prevented from organising together in a trade union and concluding collective agreements.

Europe's landmark deal on collective redress, explained

It's rare that a book is both a solid, clear introduction to a complicated topic, and a good intervention in current arguments about that topic. Although the European Commission has whereby alerts and corresponding measures are notified via this system, ultimately member states are in charge of making and implementing the decisions.

Collective Action in the European Union: Interests and the New Politics of ...

A number of countries fail to protect union members from discrimination or victimisation, including Bulgaria, Romania and Poland, where some categories of workers also do not have the right to organise. The actual text pages are superbly set, and are all that's needed; two faces, rules for acronyms and well spaced small caps, neat indents and clear tables. Absolutely nothing to do with the author, who did his best to invest dinner personality.

Time to put an end to union

At the same time, we Europeans need to look more after our own security.
