HOMEWORK POLICY

KILLEEN N.S.

INTRODUCTION

Parents' interest and parental attitudes to their children's education are, according to authentic research, a most significant influence on a child's learning.

Homework offers a new Working independently and developing self-discipline by which parents can demonstrate their interest and share their influence. It represents a regular link between home and school and provides a very good opportunity for the development of practical partnership between parent, child and teacher.

Homework occupies an important place in the educational process.

AIMS AND OBJECTIVES OF HOMEWORK

The European Parents' Association Report on Homework in Europe lists the following acceptable purposes for homework:

- Reinforcement and practice of work already done in class.
- Preparation for classwork, introducing tasks, which extend beyond work already done in class or held open.
- Testing the child's understanding of work covered or completed in class.
- Providing a means by which teachers can encourage parents to become more actively involved in their child's education.
- Providing a means by which parents can see the sort of work the child is doing in school.
- Enabling class work to concentrate on activities which require the teacher's presence.

USING HOMEWORK EFFECTIVELY AS AN EDUCATIONAL TOOL

The European Parents' Association Report outlines and discusses in some detail the features of effective homework. The following are some of the features worthy of particular note.

- Homework should be part of a carefully devised learning programme.
- Homework should have a purpose.
- Homework policy should be part of the school plan, with consistent policy applying throughout the school.
- Homework should be suited to the capabilities of pupils, and children should be capable of tackling the homework set.

Policy on working in partnership with parents

Thank you for a great article on how important it is to involve parents in the process of setting school policy on discipline and creating a safe school climate. Credit: Marc Rosenthal Children learn best when the significant adults in their lives -- parents, teachers, and other family and community members -- work together to encourage and support them. Families who have English as an additional language The nursery is committed to ensuring all families feel welcome and included in the setting and we have adopted certain practices to help support families with EAL.

Policy on working in partnership with parents

The good news is that there are easy ways to enjoy time with your child that also support learning. Our mission is to transform schools to revolutionize school systems, empowering all students with a high-quality education. It is the parents' responsibility to advise C.

Pathways to success for youth: What counts in after-school. As with any relationship, mutual respect, the ability to listen, and lots of communication form the foundation.

Policies & Procedures

Afterschool and summer programs can use these data both to track and strengthen student performance and to demonstrate the impact of their services. It is time for a dramatic reassessment of the effects that discipline policies — including zero tolerance policies -- have on bolstering educational success for our most at-risk and exceptional populations. These structures may include mentoring programs with community members, advisory systems to address well-being, and professional development for staff and families to ensure appropriate implementation.

The National Schools Partnership

Through these networks, parents can not only advance their own education but also demonstrate for their children that adults need to keep working at learning, too. Funding and staffing support from PASA has provided resources to expand academic and enrichment program options and double the number of participants. Regular Communication Parents and teachers must find new ways to have clear and consistent

A How

Dismantling the school-to-prison pipeline serves as backbone of a systemic approach to reforming the school environment to cultivate safe and meaningful school community for all. Parental Involvement in school climate based teams Parents, families and communities must be involved in the creation and assessment of school-based discipline policies. If we have heavy snowfall during the day and we decide to close the school, we shall send a text to the mobile number that you provided in September so please look out for this.

National Standards for Family

A successful parent-teacher partnership also shows a child that an entire team of adults is on her side. Parents and carers views are welcomed and any issues and ideas are shared and discussed in an informal way. Other roles, however, require more commitment: serving as mentors, teacher aides, or lunchroom monitors, or providing assistance to schools and students in myriad other ways.
