Waverley Gold District Barrel quartz is a local term used to describe the gold deposit on Laidlaw Hill in Waverley in the late 1800s. A particularly fine example of Nova Scotia gold Gold mining has been a part of's heritage for 150 plus years and continues to this day.

Gold mining in Nova Scotia

As deforestation and urban development increase, abandoned mines have become an important source of habitat for a number of bat species. The Moose River Gold Mines site will also process ore from the company's mine at its Beaver Dam deposit, 37 km away, which has an estimated yield of 426,600 ounces.

The gold fields of Nova Scotia

There were around 350 mines worked in these districts. By 1869 the small-time operators working in the area were driven out by flooding issues.
The miners just used it to describe what they saw: folded, gold-bearing quartz veins whose outcrops are corrugated and resemble barrels.
